

MANUFACTURING IN TEXAS

Manufacturing matters to the Texas economy and manufacturers continue to invest in the Lone Star State.

According to the most recent data from the U.S. Census Bureau, Texas leads the nation in manufacture shipment value, and is second in employment, annual payroll, value added, and capital expenditures.

CREATING JOBS

Manufacturing provides good-paying jobs, higher than most other industry wages. In 2009, the average manufacturing annual salary in Texas was $51,069 and there were approximately 753,741 manufacturing employees in Texas.

Texas ranks 2nd in the nation in the number of manufacturing industry jobs at U.S. subsidiaries. More than 35 percent of jobs at U.S. subsidiaries in Texas are in the manufacturing industry—accounting for 156,300 jobs.

Manufacturers' News Inc. ranked Houston the number one city in the United States for industrial employment with 228,226 manufacturing jobs. Several companies including Samsung, Toyota, 3M, Klein Tools, idX, and TapcoEnpro have recently announced manufacturing and relocation projects that will bring additional manufacturing jobs to Texas.

EXPORTS

Texas has led the nation in exports for the past nine years. In 2010, the state's exports were valued at $207 billion and about 77.3 percent of which were manufactured goods. While Texas exports to a global market, the state's largest export market continues to be NAFTA trading partners Mexico and Canada, which account for about 44 percent of the state's total exports.
